NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent,

NEW YORK, Oct. 12, 1870. Our New Crystal Palace. Some months ago I mentioned that a Crystal Palace was soon to be built in this city. Since then the plan has taken more definite shape, and the association has purchased the land which is at present occupied by some cattleyards between Third and Fourth avenues, above the Yorkville tunnel. The area comprises more than twenty-two acres, and commands a really splendid view of Long Island Sound, New York Bay, Yorkville and Harlem, Long Island, and the lower part of Westchester county, East river and North river, and the Palisades. The building is to be thirty-six hundred feet long and one hundred and fifty wide, and three of the sides will be eight stories in beight. It will occupy the four sides of the area named, with an open central space of about eleven acres. These eleven acres are to be laid out like a garden, to be furnished with statuary, flowers, and shrubs. The materials out of which the new building is to be constructed are iron and glass, and the style of the architecture is to be extremely ornamental. The capital of the Association is rated at seven millions of dollars-a capital quite sufficient to build such an edifice as New York would have every reason to be proud of, and to cherish as an exponent of the amount of architectural skill attained by metropolitan artists. The locality is certainly one of the best for the purposes that could possibly be selected.

Mr. Tilton and Lager Beer. If report speaks truly, Mr. Tilton and a reverend brother have got into some misunderstanding respecting a lager beer question. The misunderstanding is so complicated, and partakes so largely of the convolutions of the Schleswig-Holstein difficulty, that I despair of making the reader understand, with exactness, what the entanglement is all about. About three years ago, it seems that Mr. Tilton and the Rev. J. D. Fulton, of Boston, dined at Delmonico's together, and that wine was upon the table. Some time after this Mr. Tilton heard that Mr. Fulton had said that he (Tilton) admitted that he occasionally used wine for his brain's sake (not, like Timothy, for his stomach's). Another some time after, Mr. Tilton was assured by a merchant of this city that Mr. Fulton had gone into a Bowery restaurant with him (the merchant), and had there drank several glasses of beer, and that he (Fulton) appeared to be a good judge of the article. These different stories naturally caused a correspondence between the two reverend gentlemen, the counter-allegations being rendered all the more spicy from the fact that Mr. Fulton is a temperance preacher and orator, and Mr. Tilton is, as every one knows, the editor of a "religious" newspaper. What the precise truth of the matter is I am not prepared to say; although it is interesting to note that the merchant who originally gave Mr. Fulton his information has since written to him, promising that, in case the matter comes into court, he is ready to substantiate his statements.

Mr. Beecher's Heterodox Heaven. From season to season Mr. Beecher grows more and more charmingly heterodox. It is pleasant to see a preacher brave enough to depart from doctrines which the greater part of his congregation have been educated to believe in, and which they so devoutly cherish. Neither by the press nor by his brethren of the pulpit has Mr. Beecher ever been accused of adhering too closely to the literal meaning of Biblical descriptions, and this season his departures from literality have been more conspicuous than ever. Perhaps his summer holidays, communion with nature, and looking from nature up to nature's God, has had the effect of making him see both nature and God a little more plainly than he has hitherto done. For those of the orthodox whom he offends there is sufficient compensation among the heterodox whom he pleases. Thus, in his latest sermon about heaven, he gave a spirituality to the subject, and at the same time a materiality, which many of his hearers had not hitherto believed in. He insisted that the gates of pearl and the streets of gold were all metaphorical illusions, and plainly meant only to convey the idea that, after all, heaven was beyond all description. One of the later of the many false charges brought against Mr. Beecher is that he is a spiritualist. There is no truth in that. He is very far from being a spiritualist according to the ordinary meanings of the word spiritualism. He has investigated the subject. however, more thoroughly than most clergymen would do, and has gone so far as to pay a professional spiritual test medium for giving a seance at his own (Beecher's) house. This, it must be confessed, is an extent of liberality at which the orthodox brethren would be shocked. Janauschek's English.

Janauschek has appeared at the Academy of Music, and truth compels the admission that she does pronounce English remarkably well. Not, indeed, with the absolute perfection that is claimed for her by managers and agents, but still to so great a degree of exactness that no one not hypercritical will feel disposed to find much fault with her. Strange to say, however, the very word which she pronounces with least correctness is the one upon which most emphasis and importance are to be laid-the name of the hero. In pronouncing that her original. intonations strike through the thin strata of English, and the result is very amusing. Daly, however, has managed to get some of the most influential papers on his side. By engaging one critic to do some work for him, and employing the wife of another as a member of his stock company, he has won to his side two of the most influential papers of New York. He has also made it part of his mistaken policy to snub such papers as dare to say Janauschek is not greater than Ristori, Rachel, Seebach, and Siddons all combined. ALI BABA.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

Mad'lle Nilsson's First Concert. Curiosity, if no other motive, was sufficient to attract a very large and fashionable audience to the Academy of Music last evening to witness the debut in this city of Mad'lie Christine Nilsson. The personal appearance of this artist is exceedingly prepossessing, and gained for her the good will of the audience as soon as she made her appearance. She has a tall, graceful, and very elegant figure, and her face, if not absolutely beautiful, has a peculiarly charming expression that is more attractive than mere beauty. With regard to her artistic abilities, those who have read with attention the most discriminating French and English criticisms that have appeared since her European debut were able to form in advance a very fair opinion as to the exact extent of her merits, and although a concert performance affords a genuine artist but indifferent opportunities, it can be said with justice that she justified last evening the very high expectations that had been formed with regard to her. Her voice lacks some of the finer elements of Madame Parepa-Rosa's, particularly that wonderful richness of tone and flute-like quality in some of the notes that gave Madame Rosa a position upon the American lyric stage above any lyric artist that has appeared for a score of Mad'lle Nilsson, however, surpasses Madame Rosa, Carlo, ta Patti, Mrss Kellogg, or any other of the best singers of the day in one very important particular. She is an emotional singer of the very highest rank; and with thorough culture and a pure, chaste style that is in itself delightful, her voice unites a sympathetic quality that, in music of a certain class, will place her above all rivals, We can probably indicate our meaning to the maority of our readers by saying that we believe Mad'lle Nilsson can perform the part of "Marguerite," in Gounod's Panet, in a manner that it has never been performed upon the stage of the Ac viemy of Music. This will explain the wonderful auxess she has achieved both in London and Pais in such roles as "Marguerite," "Ophella," and "Mignon." The two last bave never been given in this city, but any reader of Shakespeare's Hamlet or Goethe's Withelm Meister can form an idea of the artistic qualities that are necessary to give expression to all that there is in such characters as "Ophelia" and "Mignon." Mad'ile Nilsson's part in the concert last evening consisted of Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," a scene from Lucia di Lammermoor, and the "For's le lui Traviata," from La Traviata. The first was given with exquisite purity and expression, and the other two selections gave the singer no opportunities to display her brilliant execution and her dra natic powers, and in "Home, Sweet Home," which was given in response to a demand for an encore, she charmed the audience by the pathos which she infused into the simple melody. Mad'lle Nilsson is a thorough artist, and the simple directness of her style, and the absence of trickery in her vocalization, are particularly pleasing.

The support which was given to the chief attraction of the evening was unusually good. M. Vieuxtemps sustained the high reputation he won years ago as a violinist by his brilliant performance of a fantasie introducing the leading airs from Foust, and by the transition from grave to gay which he made by giving "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning" as an encore. Miss Anna Louise Cary, who was an entire stranger here, both by name and reputation, and was therefore without the advantage of any prepossessions in her favor, achieved a decided and, under all the circumstances, a brilliant success by her singing of the celebrated cavatina from Rossini's Semiramide. Her voice is a full, sweet contraito, highly cultivated and with excellent power of expression. As an encore she gave "Kathleen Mavourneen," and this, with her singing in a trio with Signori Brignoli and Verger, confirmed the favorable impression she made. Miss Cary is evidently destined to take a high rank among American singers. Signor Verger has a baritone voice of agreeable quality, and his portions of the programme were executed in excellent style. With the merits of Signor Brignoil our readers are familiar. He sang in his usual style last night, and proved himself to be what he has been for the past dozen years in spite of his faults the greatest tenor before the public. The orchestra, under the direction of Max Maretzek, added greatly to the attractive character of the entertainment, and it opened the concert in good style by an excellent rendering of the overture to William Tell.

The City Amusements.

MAD'LLE NILSSON will appear for the second time in concert at the Academy of Music on Friday

FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE.—The stream of people flowing into this place every evening may be considered a Nilsson rush.
